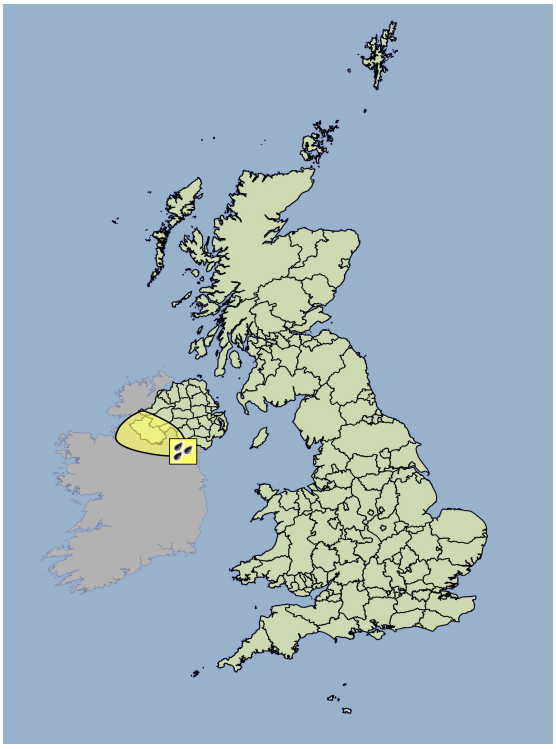
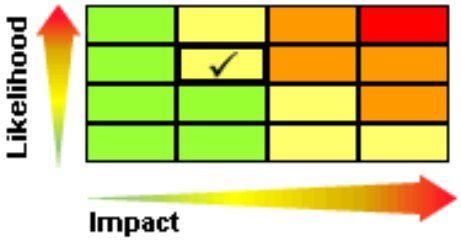
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A small area of low pressure that is developing over Ireland will drift slowly north across Northern Ireland this evening and overnight. Some heavy rain is likely to develop in association with this feature. 10-15 mm likely quite widely with as much as 20-25 mm possible, more especially in County Fermanagh. Much of this could fall within a 6 to 9 hour period but should ease later on Monday night.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 19:00 on Mon, 17th Feb 2014 until 06:00 on Tue, 18th Feb 2014

Periods of heavy rain are expected across some southern and western parts of Northern Ireland on Monday evening lasting into the early hours of Tuesday.
Given the wet ground, the public should be aware that this could lead to some localised flooding.
